Once, one can hear the theme again, two of the pianists start playing on the wood-blocks once more. The following part of the fugue seems more chaotic than the previous ones. This is caused by the theme being altered, furthermore, the number of performers playing the piano and the wood-blocks varies.

For the last several years I've been impressed with a recording of this repertoire made by super-virtuoso Marc-André Hamelin Reger: Variations and Fugue on a Theme of J. S. Bach. I've returned to it again and again, and have come to believe that these two large sets of variations are indeed masterworks.
